

IIF SPONSORED WORKSHOP GUIDELINES

In this document, we provide the rules regarding the organization and oversight of IIF sponsored workshops. The success of this IIF initiative depends on the willingness, entrepreneurship, and volunteering work of the agents promoting the workshop. Recognizing this much effort, the IIF will support the budget of the organizers in charge. The Institute, however, is not involved in the organization or the promotion of the workshops, beyond the provision of appropriate links through our website, and inclusion of relevant information in the Institute's newsletter: The Oracle.

1. Objective

The workshop should focus on very specific and timely forecasting topics. It should have a well-defined theme that links the prospective papers. It normally runs over 1.5 days with about 8-10 presenters and their corresponding discussants. This small setting allows for informal discussions and productive exchanges. However, the exact format of the workshop can be subject to some variation, depending on the number of participants and the overall theme addressed. For example, round-table discussions or breakout sessions may be appropriate.

2. Sponsorship

Interested organizers should contact the IIF director in charge and provide a theme and a preliminary budget, along with the rationale for introducing such workshop and a justification of its timeliness. There is no specific format to be followed, rather, we are looking for concise information about the workshop topic, why is it important and timely, when (more or less) it will take place, where it will be organized, who will be organizing the workshop and/or has expressed an interest in presenting, and how much money it will cost (breaking down the budget to some key categories and identifying what the support requested from IIF is).

The organizers must have a sponsor in place that provides the majority of the funds to guarantee the success of the workshop. IIF does not support the organization of workshops that does not have a principal sponsor. The workshop is open to the public at large and the organizers may choose to set a small registration fee to defray the costs of the organization. However, such fees should be only nominal, to reflect the non-profit nature of the IIF. That is, workshops cannot be treated as for-profit endeavors and the organizers should strive to introduce the lowest fees possible to participants – if such fees need to be introduced in the first place.

The organization resides with the local organizers, and the IIF will offer advice and suggestions and limited financial assistance when needed. The organizers may extend invitations to speakers and discussants and/or may write a call for papers from which they will select the workshop presentations. The organizers should keep the IIF director informed about the progress of the workshop. Travel expenses of speakers and discussants will be covered as much as possible by the sponsor funds and within the rules established by the sponsor. If some travel expenses were to be covered by IIF funds, the Institute would only reimburse economy air fare. IIF will not provide funds upfront to the organizers. However, IIF will pay specific expenses (e.g., refreshments etc.) directly against invoices and/or reimburse speakers for their travel directly. The format and the program of the workshop will be designed by the organizers within the general setting established above.

3. IIF budget

The IIF allocation for workshops will be discussed every year at the annual meeting of the Board of Directors. We aim to sponsor two workshops per year. However, if we receive more than two competitive requests, the IIF director may request an increase in the allocation for that year. If the Treasurer considers that the financial status of the IIF is sound and the requested increase does not jeopardize the accounts, the President will bring the requested allocation to the Board for a vote.

4. Approval

At the annual meeting of the Board of Directors, the director in charge of workshops should present a summary of the workshop activities of the current and future years. The Board will discuss and approve whatever workshops are proposed at the time of the meeting. However, requests will be coming during the year, and in this case the primary IIF director in consultation with the assigned secondary IIF directors will approve or disapprove the request.

5. Advertising

The local organizers will advertise the workshop as widely as possible. The IIF will announce the workshop and will establish the necessary links to the local organizers in the Institute's website and newsletters.

In all advertising elements, fliers, web page, mailings, etc., as well as documents used for the course and distributed to participants, reference to IIF sponsorship and the IIF logo should be included.

6. International Journal of Forecasting (IJF) special issue

The International Journal of Forecasting may choose to run a special issue on the theme of the workshop, primarily drawing upon selected papers from the workshop. The workshop organizers should seek approval of the Editor-in-Chief of IJF, who in consultation with the IIF director in charge of workshops will appoint guest editors and an IJF associate editor responsible for maintaining the quality standards of the journal.

7. Summary of activities

The local organizers will provide a summary of the workshop within two months after the workshop has taken place. They should also provide some detailed documentation on how the IIF sponsorship funds were spent. These documents should be sent to the IIF director, with the first one being posted in the IIF website and other venues like The Oracle newsletter.
